Municipal Library of Prague

The rapid pace of the new way of life requires new people who will be educated by libraries. Individuals capable of facing an accelerated reality without fear, yet at the same time capable of using scepticism to defend themselves against its excessive pride.

Introductory note from the Mayor of the City of Prague

The Czech writer Julius Zeyer once said that “a house without books is like a body without a soul”. This leads me to the conclusion that a house with more than two million books must have an extremely vivid and beautiful soul. Even more so since this house generously makes its wealth available to everybody who desires it. There are certainly plenty of those who wish to make use of the public library’s generosity and enrich their souls – the number of visitors to the Municipal Library of Prague last year exceeded the total number of volumes in the library.

The very first books were seen almost as a miracle, something very precious and of great wealth. They contained all mysteries the human race had managed to discover up until that moment. However, their value was also in their exquisite designs and the volume of human labour and time required for producing each book. There is little wonder that those who owned books had no intention of sharing them with others and often cherished their treasures so much that they never read the books themselves.

Fortunately, the entire process has been made simpler and less costly over the centuries and the value of books now depends mainly on their contents, the power of ideas described in them, the author’s personality and the beauty of their words. However, this did not remove the mystery behind the creation of a book or reduce the value of books for a human life. A good book can touch your heart, relieve pain and take away worries or even give your life new sense. John Ruskin expressed the importance of books for human life in a lapidary and pertinent statement: “Books to a man are the same as wings to a bird”.

As far back as 1919 the founders of our state legislated that every municipality must have a public library. Perhaps they were inspired by Cardinal Federigo Borromeo, who opened his private library in Milan to the public in 1609, or by Julius Caesar, who declared opening a public library a duty every ruler should honour. Prague has had its own public library since 1st July 1891. The Municipal Library of the City of Prague in its current location, i.e. in the vicinity of the Municipal Authority of the City of Prague, was opened on the occasion of the 10th anniversary of the state’s existence. The physical proximity of these two buildings and continuous financial support provided to the library reflects the municipal council’s view of the public library’s importance for confirming and reinforcing the city’s position of a European centre of culture and education. The continued interest of Prague residents in the library’s services and the constant improvement in the quality of the services provided show that the library successfully fulfils its function.

Library, its people and their library

We walked together side by side through a long corridor all the way to the door at its end. The man next to me looked ancient. He wore an anthracite suit with a waistcoat in the same colour, broadcloth sleeves pulled over his jacket. His elegant beard was almost white and so was his slick hair brushed to the back. Glasses with a bone frame gave his face an air of strictness and the only detail disturbing his reserved appearance was a pink carnation in the lapel. He pulled a gold watch out of his pocket, glanced at it, nodded and hastened. His appearance was strange and had I met him elsewhere, I probably would have been very surprised. But not here; I knew I was only dreaming him and this man seemed an appropriate character for a dream.

When we reached the end of the corridor, he reached into his pocket and pulled out a large key. He turned the key in the lock with a loud click and opened the door. He made a gesture with his hand letting me know that I should go ahead. I walked forward cautiously because the room was dark. My steps on the parquet floor echoed like in an empty gymnasium. The man reached somewhere to the side and the click of a switch could be heard shortly after that. The room was flooded with light at the same moment when the man proudly proclaimed: "This is our new public library!"

The room was enormous, larger than the gymnasium it had reminded me of earlier. Massive and completely empty. Barren walls framed the rectangle of a bare floor. There was nothing. I looked at the strange man in amazement and my look was met with a smile that had a question written all over it. He was eagerly expecting my reaction. I cleared my throat and asked: "Yes... but where are the books?"

The smile disappeared of his face as fast as spring snow and his eyes showed disappointment. The man looked at me reproachfully and sighed: "You have asked the wrong question! You should have asked: 'Where are the people?'"

It is true – the idea of a library without books seems strange. However, the idea of a library without people makes absolutely no sense. Not books but people are the purpose of a library; people who visit the library to seek knowledge, beauty or relaxation. Books by themselves are not the essential part of what a library offers. Libraries offer a service and books are only one of the parts of this service, however important part that may be. The basic principle of this service is to acquaint the right book with its reader.

True, many readers visit the library with a clear idea of what they want to borrow. However, when leaving a good library, they always carry more than they intended. Perhaps a book that will satisfy their wishes even better. Or two. Or information where else they can find out more. Or simply reassurance that they have selected the right book. Or "just" a smile, a few friendly words and the knowledge that someone else shares and appreciates their interests.

Then there are those readers who do not have a clear idea of what they need. Google or any other excellent internet search engine will satisfy the need for a wide range of information. However, a computer cannot answer all questions:

— Hello, professor, what will you borrow today?

— I don't know myself. I have trouble falling asleep, my back is playing up.

I thought some good night reading may help.

— And have you read this?

— I have, my daughter-in-law bought it for me for Christmas.

— Did you like it?

— Well, it wasn't bad but I found it a bit too sad.

— I see, in that case we could try ... have you read this?

— Let me see ... no, I haven't. Is it good?

— I think you might like it. It's the first part in a series of five, so if you get into it, you'll have enough reading for quite a few evenings.

Naturally, a librarian also answers far more sophisticated and complex questions. The music and theatre section of the MLP provides its services to many top professionals – directors, composers, musicians... The same way as leading specialists visit our Pragensia sections and other specialised departments. Even the smallest of our branches answers challenging questions from all fields of human activities imaginable.

A public library is a wonderful institution – democratic to the core of its essence. It does not differentiate between very important and less important readers – all readers are equally important. You could say that any minister, university professor or a famous actor are as important as little John who came to solve his problem with a paper for his Czech language classes. Or to look at it from a different angle: little John will receive as qualified, caring and meticulous service as any famous personality from our public life – and plenty of them do visit our library. Every question is important and every need for information is a challenge for the library.

Therefore, I would like to devote my introductory note to the 2005 Annual Report of the Municipal Library of Prague to people. To my colleagues librarians and our regular readers, as well as those who visit us only occasionally. I would like to thank them all for patronage. You will have a chance to meet some of them on the photographs that accompany this publication. Others, you may meet in person when you visit one of our branches.

And perhaps – if you are lucky – you will meet the ancient man in his anthracite suit. He will be smiling at you.

Tomáš Řehák, the Director of the Municipal Library of Prague

A public library performs a great service by caring for the cultivated use of leisure time by the general public and preventing many from giving in to bad influences or an indecent way of life.

Activities of the Municipal Library of Prague in 2005

— successful lending activities – a record number of registered readers (195,797) and historically the second highest number of visits (2,321,294) and lent items (7,396,260); the year 2004 remained undefeated in the number of lent items (by 2.6 %) and the number of visits (by 4.7 %) – many libraries were closed temporarily in 2005 (a number of branches were automated and one-off projects for entering the library collection in a database as a prerequisite for the subsequent fast automation were implemented in other branches), the decreased number of visits is also associated with the fact that physical presence in the library is no longer required for many lending tasks (such as booking, extending the period of loan; they can be performed over the Internet);

— the interest of readers in services provided by automated libraries is increasing – automated libraries currently serve 81 % of MLP readers, 84 % of visits to the library and 79 % items lent in the MLP;

— opening additional automated branches (Černý Most, Petřiny, Hostivař, Na Veselí) and their integration into the network; associated with the continuing optimisation of the library network and fulfilling the schedule for its automation (reconstruction of an additional 2 branches – Dáblice, Krč); as of the end of this year the MLP should have 25 automated libraries and 24 libraries without automation;

— development of new services, such as providing access to the new Czech encyclopaedic online database COTO.JE (containing more than half a million of topics and almost 30,000 images; the database used Otta's Educational Dictionary, Otta's Educational Dictionary of the New Age, Small Czechoslovak Encyclopaedia and the Universum encyclopaedia as sources of information) in the Information Centre of the Central Library; the MLP also provided remote user access to three online databases (ProQuest 5000, COTO.JE, The Oxford Reference Online Premium) through its web pages; the library also provided access to information about the European Union through the ČTK's Infobank;

— the Koniáš automated library system used by the MLP – implementation of changes relating to the new Library Rules of the MLP (such as the option of booking library items over the Internet and improved administration of bookings), modifications aimed at improving the performance of the system as a whole and increasing its capacity with a continuously increasing number of service points;

— further reinforcement of user access to the Internet (to 118 workstations in 29 libraries);

the grant obtained from the "Program for Internet-enabled Libraries" of the Ministry of Informatics of the CR allowed the work on connecting the remaining branches without automation – to be completed in 2006;

— wireless access to the Internet (Wi-Fi) has been provided to the readers registered with the MLP in the premises of the Central Library since 1st March 2005;

— books, magazines, music media and other types of documents to the total value of CZK 17.6 million were purchased, involving 105,654 library items; furthermore, electronic databases for CZK 500,000 were purchased; the newly acquired library items were subjected to standard library and book processing; new items were catalogued;

— the department of valuable and historical prints with a restoration shop focused especially on working with the library collection affected by the flood in 2002;

— educational activities of the Central Library and branches (especially in connection with children) and an extensive range of cultural and educational events organised by the Civic University, the total of 2,800 events for 74 thousand participants;

— participation in a range of national and regional events: March – the month of the Internet; Night with Andersen; the "Book World" book fair regularly taking place in May (a new mobile library introduced); 8th annual Bambiriáda (i.e. national presentation of activities of children and youth associations and leisure centres); nationwide Week of Libraries;

— visibility of the MLP in the Prague general public and in the CR as a whole was improved significantly; the library's activities and events are frequently mentioned in the media;

— work on the structure and appearance of the MLP web pages (www.mlp.cz) continued, interactive functions of the web pages are being enhanced; a new design for the English version of the web pages is being prepared;

— the new "Library Statute of the MLP" has been in force since 1. 1. 2005 and the library's organisational structure was modified; for example, the former department of strategic development was transformed into the department of information technologies of the MLP, the department of special collections was created within the library collection section and the post of internal auditor was established;

— intensive work on the concept material "Strategy of the MLP" with an anticipated validity period of 10 years was in progress and completion of the material is expected in the first half of 2006; this material describes the target status as a fully automated network of branches with libraries of specified parameters located optimally throughout most of the territory of the City of Prague, supplemented by mobile library stations and closely cooperating with libraries established by individual city districts;

— a detailed “Analysis of the MLP branches with regard to rental fees and their location in the relevant parts of the City of Prague” was completed and confirmed that the aim to relocate branches operated in expensive private buildings to suitable municipal buildings needs to be pursued;

— the library’s potential development programs, in particular long-term investment goals in the branch network, were updated once again; the MLP is in the process of obtaining a few grants in connection with this issue – the HISPRA project (Preservation of historical Prague-related and other valuable documents from the collection of the MLP) from the financial assistance provided by EHP and Norway with the objective to obtain digital copies of selected documents; another 3 projects strive to obtain subsidy from the European Fund for Regional Development through JPD2 – Unified Program Document for Goal 2 of the Prague region;

— the new Library Statute has been in force since 6th June, 2005 in the MLP; the new library statute fully respects the legislative changes that have occurred over the last few years, provides the thorough protection of personal data of readers and is an effective tool of the contractual relationship between individual readers and the library; this is also associated with the comprehensive update of essential forms and information materials, detailed training for all operators and some new tasks implemented in the Koniáš automated library system; the new library statute has become a model for other Czech libraries as they adopted some of its provisions or its entire structure;

— effectiveness of the reminder process and debt collection from readers (unreturned library items and overdue fees) was increased; the library collected a record sum of CZK 615 thousand (increase by 74 % compared to 2004); the trend of filing a maximum number of actions appears to be effective (the number of filed actions is therefore expected to increase in 2006); cooperation of the MLP with CreditExpress (administration of irrecoverable receivables) can also be assessed as effective;

— a mechanism for central valuation of publications damaged or lost by readers was created as an integral part of the debt collection mechanism;

— a number of specialised teams continued in their activities focused on solving individual tasks related to the library’s services and activities (for example the service commission addressed the issue of booking library items, inter-library lending, summer opening times, self-service operation, etc.); the commission for reconstruction and automation focused on 10 branches, including selected prospective projects – a potential branch in a newly constructed building of the future National Technical Library and the extension of the Ruská branch);

— the specialised education program for librarians and employees of the MLP and employees of other Prague libraries continued – 96 educational events were attended by 2,207 participants (presentation and training for the new Library Statute of the MLP; working with information and communication technologies; language courses; specialised excursions to other libraries and other specialised events);

— the converted number of employees as at 31.12.2005 was 460; as at the same date 7 % of 524 employees of the MLP (physical persons) has university education related to library science, 13 % have university education in other fields; 1 % have a bachelor degree; 25 % have secondary education related to library science; 44 % have other secondary education and the remaining 7 % have basic education without A levels;

— regional cooperation with and specialised assistance for other Prague public libraries continued as a part of our regional activities required from the MLP as the regional library by Act No. 257 (Act on Libraries);

— the MLP is a collective member of the “Association of Librarians and Information Specialists of the CR” and a member of the “Association of Libraries of the CR”; the library cooperates with other major Czech libraries, in particular with the National Library of the CR, regional libraries and municipal libraries of major centres (Brno, Plzeň); the library takes part in joint projects of Czech libraries, such as selected VISK programs (Veřejné informační služby knihoven – Public Information Service of Libraries) related to educating librarians, establishing a structure of national authorities and digitalisation of library collections;

— international specialised cooperation with libraries in major cities (especially in Europe), newly established cooperation with the Queens Borough Public Library in New York; reciprocal study visits of the MLP employees involved five foreign libraries (Aix-en-Provence, Bratislava, Copenhagen, Vienna and New York – Queens) and were followed by study visits of their employees to the MLP; other study visits involved 8 other foreign libraries.

Automated library system Koniáš

The process of automating the network and developing the library system Koniáš, which owes its name to the main application of the system including acquisition, cataloguing and lending modules, continued in 2005.

Automation of the MLP network also continued uninterrupted in 2005: branches in Černý Most, Petřín, Hostivař and Na Veselí were opened. These are mainly smaller branches that could be opened without extensive reconstruction, as reconstruction would not be adequate in these cases. As the core branches in the network were automated, the automation process entered its second stage. Similarly to other automated libraries in the MLP network, these libraries are also integrated in the unified Koniáš system and allow visitors to other libraries to make use of their collection and naturally provide access to the Internet.

Two separate projects were carried out with regard to extending access to the Internet – the “Internet-enabled Public Libraries in Prague” project entered by the MLP in the JPD2 challenge with participation of European structural funds was successfully prepared and initiated; this project will allow us to implement high-speed Internet connection in an additional nine branches of the MLP during next year. A project bearing a similar name - “Internet-enabled Public Libraries” organised under the auspices of the Ministry of Informatics of the Czech Republic will allow the MLP to implement public access to the Internet for readers for most of its branches in one step. Both projects will be completed in 2006.

Many significant modifications were made to the Koniáš system in 2005. A range of changes was implemented in the first half of the year in connection with the new Library Statute of the MLP – the most significant changes include the option of booking library items over the Internet and improved administration of bookings including the option of suspending bookings for example during holidays. Additional changes implemented during the second half of the year focused especially on improving performance of the system as a whole and increasing its capacity with the continuously growing number of service points. Certain essential diagnostic measures were taken and an analysis of the transition to a complete three-tier architecture was completed. Implementing this architecture will be among the main tasks for 2006.

Development of the MLP web pages also continued, in particular in connection with additional online services. Selected paid internet databases were made available to MLP readers and remote access was set up to allow our readers to access these databases directly from their home computers.

International cooperation

The Municipal Library of Prague is a member of many organisations providing an umbrella for international cooperation between libraries and actively participates in their activities:

IFLA (International Federation of Library Associations and Institutions),
IAML (International Association of Music Libraries Archives and Documentation Centres),
SIBMAS (International Association of Libraries and Museums of the Performing Arts)

Overview of international events in 2005

International cooperation of the Municipal Library of Prague in 2005 focused on a few basic areas. These included reciprocal visits organised as a part of cooperation with libraries abroad, international business trips by employees of the MLP, and business visits by foreign experts to the Municipal Library of Prague.

Reciprocal events

These are reciprocal visits of employees organised at an international level between cooperating libraries. The Municipal Library of Prague works with the following libraries:

Københavns Kommune Bibliotekerne, Copenhagen, Denmark
(<http://www.kkb.bib.dk/>)

La Cité du Livre, La bibliothèque Méjanes, Aix-en-Provence, France

Mestská knižnica v Bratislave, Bratislava, Slovakia
(<http://www.mestskakniznica.sk/>)

Queens Borough Public Library, New York, USA (<http://www.queenslibrary.org/#>)

During their reciprocal visits our employees focus on specific projects according to their specialisation.

Topics for study visits of individual employees during 2005:

Methods of processing, storing and providing conventional and new types of documents with emphasis on digitisation;

Comparing the potential of different approaches to lending audiovisual media, options for processing the collection in electronic databases;

Theatre and film literature, stage design, costumes, cataloguing and options for obtaining texts of theatre plays and scripts;

Work in a children's department, educational programs for children, cooperation of librarians for children, cooperation with educational institutions;

Organisation of library services, trends and forthcoming changes, work with minorities;

Experience and work of the relevant library with periodicals, deposit copies;

Reconstruction and operation of libraries;

Management, strategic planning, human resources, organisation of labour, PR and communication, information technologies;

International business trips

Regular contact with readers face to face – this is important. Live material. An integral librarian act is a systematic journey to higher levels with each reader separately. A librarian helps readers to find themselves and determines where their place in their lives may be. Once detected, they do not let go of the threads of personality and work hard to reinforce them systematically.

Booking ensures that readers can receive books they are keenly interested in as soon as possible. This however requires consistent reminders for those who have kept books beyond the determined loan period. Reminders sometimes create conflicts and discourage insulted readers but reasonable readers understand their necessity. They teach readers to observe deadlines.

In certain circles of the so-called intelligence, in particular where a certain level of material comfort and security exists, a significantly greater degree of spiritual laziness can be found than in the common middle class circles.

A librarian fulfils the role of modern clergyman. He stimulates the aggressive, enthusiastic and ambitious youth, while comforting the comfortless old age and finding remedies for life's tribulations. This warmth and blessing must radiate from a librarian's personality – then we can talk about a live and creative librarian who has eyes for seeing, ears for hearing and the heart of a human being.
